“Your Ancestor’s Wildest Dream”: Virtual Reading and Discussion with Sharmaine Lovegrove

How did the Windrush Generation transform arts and culture in Britain? How has the British literary industry changed in the last decades? What role does the representation of diverse literary voices play in society? What literary futures do publishers like Sharmaine envision? Join us for a reading followed by a discussion on such questions and more.

Sharmaine Lovegrove is one of the first black female publishers in the UK. She owned a bookstore in Berlin, before starting her own imprint, Dialogue Books, as part of Little, Brown in 2018. Sharmaine has permanently disrupted the publishing industry. (Courtesy: Mother Country: Real Stories of the Windrush Children)
